(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The "Louisville to Bardstown Turnpike Milestones and Roadbed" are a series of nine limestone "Mile Markers" and a small section of original limestone roadbed marking the path of the 1830s Louisville-Bardstown turnpike. They are situated at intervals along or near the right-of-way of US 31E from Louisville to Bardstown, KY. Each limestone mile marker is inscribed with a "#L #B" indicating the number of miles to Louisville (#L) and to Bardstown (#B). The markers are of the same "tombstone" shape and vary in height from 15" to 51". While the position of some of the stones has been adjusted somewhat over the years due to the widening of the highway, their relative position to each other, and along the original 39-mile 1830s turnpike route, remains historically intact.

Narrative Description

Details of the location, size, condition, and characteristics, plus photos of each of the nine limestone mile markers (from north-to-south along the 1830s turnpike route) and the roadbed section are included as follows in numerical order:

#1. "12L 27B" mile marker:

Location: In "Triangle Park" near Fern Creek High School at the northwest corner of Bardstown Road (US 31E) and Fern Creek Road in Fern Creek, KY.

Size: 15" x 23" x 7"

Condition: good

Altered, re-displayed onto a monument base

Relocated from east side to the west side of Bardstown Road

This is the only mile marker that remains standing along the Jefferson County section of the original turnpike. Years ago, during the widening of Bardstown Road, it was saved and stored away by a historic-minded local citizen. In 1992, the stone was re-dedicated and prominently displayed in the west end of "Triangle Park" on the opposite side of the road from its original location.¹ This stone was inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource in 2018 (JFL-587).

It is in good condition, with the "12L 27B" carved lettering somewhat worn but still legible.

#2. "20L 19B" mile marker:

Location: Downtown Mt. Washington, KY on Old Bardstown Road (US 31EX) across from the intersection of Flatlick Road at the north parking lot of First Baptist Church.

Size: 15" x 19" x 7"

Condition: good

Altered, re-displayed onto a monument base

Relocated to other side of new paver sidewalk, away from roadway curb edge, 40' north of original location

This is the only mile marker still standing along the 6-mile Bullitt County section of the original turnpike. In 2016, in cooperation with the City of Mt. Washington, KyTC District #5, the Mt. Washington Historical Society and concerned citizens and local businesses, it was saved from further deterioration sitting along the curb edge of the street, relocated and redisplayed 40' to the north by the Mt. Washington Youth Chamber of Preservationists of Bullitt East High School to become a historic centerpiece of downtown Mt. Washington.⁵ This stone was inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource in 2018 (BUM-81).

The stone has lost some of its surface from vertical scaling but remains in good condition with the "20L 19B" carved lettering still clearly legible.

Location: In the ditch line of KY Hwy 523 (formerly part of US 31E) in the front corner of farm property at 1501 Old Louisville Road, Cocks Creek, KY, a few yards south of the intersection road from the new US 31E to KY Hwy 48/523 at Deerwood subdivision.

Size: 16" x 30" x 7"
Condition: excellent
Unaltered
Original location

This is the only mile marker still standing along the Spencer County section of the original turnpike. This stone was inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource in 2018 (SP-416).

It is in excellent condition with the "25L 14B" carved lettering clearly legible.

Location: Outside edge of ditch line in front of farm property at 10395 Louisville Road (old US 31E), Coss Creek, KY, just south of the intersection of KY Hwy 523.

Size: 16" x 28" x 7"

Condition: good

Unaltered

Original location

This mile marker is the northern-most of six that remain standing along the original turnpike route in Nelson County. It was originally inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource (NE-502) in 2002 and re-inventoried in greater detail in 2018.

Gravity and soggy ground have caused the stone to lean more toward the ditch over the years. Otherwise, the stone is in very good condition with the "29L 10B" carved lettering still clearly legible.

Original location

This stone was originally inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource (NE-501) in 2002 and re-inventoried in greater detail in 2018. It was knocked over by a vehicle accident in October 2016. It was recovered by the Bardstown office of KDOH District #4 and in February 2017, was put back in its original location.⁵

Some of the stone was broken off the upper left by the vehicle accident, but otherwise, the stone remains in very good condition with the "34L 5B" lettering still clearly legible.

Location: Along US 31E a few yards south of the entrance drive to 3317 Louisville Road, Bardstown, KY just north of Abbey Ridge Road and Sisters of Nazareth.

Size: 16" x 51" x 8.5"
Condition: excellent
Unaltered
Original location

A Kentucky Historical Marker sign at the location tells visitors of the early turnpike milestones, the charter of the Bardstown-Louisville Turnpike Company in 1831, and the completion of the turnpike in 1838. This mile marker was originally inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource (NE-500) in 2002 and re-inventoried in greater detail in 2018.

In spite of over 180 years of weathering and traffic, the stone and carved lettering remain in excellent condition.

Location: Along the sidewalk edge on N. 3rd Street (US 31E) in Bardstown, KY near the intersection of Maple Grove Court, one block north of KY Hwy 245.

Size: 16" x 19" x 5"

Condition: fair

Altered, offset by 90° from original orientation

Relocated away from widened road to other side of new sidewalk

This is the first-mile marker north of the Bardstown terminus of the 1830s turnpike. During the widening of this section of US 31E, it was struck by a backhoe. It was put back in place perpendicular to the road rather than the original parallel placement (with the lettering facing the road) as all of the stones were originally situated.⁵ This stone was inventoried as a Kentucky Historic Resource in 2018 (NEB-570).

It has experienced significant weathering and erosion and the "38L 1B" carved lettering is difficult to make out.

Altered, gravel laid on a portion that became used as a farm lane
Original location

This section of the original turnpike is the only known section of the original 39-mile turnpike route that remains exposed showing the method and durability of the macadam limestone roadbed construction of the 1830s. It is situated on a 19-acre parcel purchased by the Future Fund Endowment, Inc. in early 2018 for historic and nature preservation.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike, beginning construction in 1831, served "as built" for nearly 90 years as the main route for central Kentuckians, until 1925 when it was replaced by the newly improved and paved Jackson Highway.

This turnpike was a strong and vital asset to travel and trade as it passed through numerous cities, helping not only the citizens but the culture, progress towards new innovation and development. It served as a major route for passenger travel and for the transport of bourbon, tobacco, livestock, poultry, and other products of central Kentucky to riverfront warehouses in Louisville for storage, processing and shipment on the Ohio River to other parts of the country. Thus, the turnpike is significant under National Register Criteria A.

The Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike also meets National Register Criteria C, specifically significant in the areas of transportation and engineering. The Louisville-Bardstown turnpike was not just one of the earliest turnpikes to be constructed in Kentucky, but it also served as a lasting example of the more advanced engineering, durability, and maintainability of the "McAdams Plan" for road construction (later described). Additionally, the limestone turnpike mile markers included in this nomination are all characterized by the same "tombstone" shape, created from locally harvested limestone, and bearing the same style and size of chiseled lettering.

The turnpike mile markers and the 0.56 mile segment of original turnpike roadbed are significant for the periods of 1831-1924; contributing to the history of commerce and transportation from the beginning of construction through the useful life of the original turnpike, and 1831-1837; during the period of construction, embodying the distinctive characteristics of the early history of turnpike road construction in Kentucky.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Kentucky's Early Turnpikes:

Long before modern highways and expressways lined every county around the United States creating a faster, safer, and more efficient way to connect communities, 1800's America was thriving with an early turnpike system consisting of a network of many different roads with numerous toll stations along the route. At these "toll booths", travelers had to pay a toll in accordance to their mode of transportation. The term "turnpike" refers to a pike that would sit in front of the traveler until they paid the toll, after which the pike would be turned out of their way allowing them to continue on their journey.^{2,4}

Early Kentucky Turnpike Toll House
Kentucky Historical Society Collections,
donated by William B. Dulaney,

Kentucky's turnpike routes started in February 1817 when the State legislature authorized the formation of the Lexington and Louisville Turnpike Road Company and the Lexington and Maysville Turnpike Road Company. The administration of these early turnpike companies remained the precedent by which future turnpike companies in Kentucky would be formed and administered throughout the 1800s.³

The Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike:

One of the earliest turnpikes to be constructed was the Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike. The Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike was a total of 39 miles in length, beginning at the old courthouse at 6th and Jefferson Street in Louisville and terminating at the old "Market House" at what is now the intersection of 3rd and Broadway Street in Bardstown.⁵ The 1830's Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike was vital to the growth and prosperity of North Central Kentucky and remains important to our history.^{1,4}

Library of Congress – Geography, James T. Lloyd

The Louisville Turnpike Company was chartered in 1818 to explore the construction of a permanent route that would join Louisville and Bardstown. Under company President John Speed, a wealthy Louisville plantation owner, and former judge, following a series of debates and surveys of several potential routes, construction began in early 1831. Conveniently, the route finally chosen for the first ten miles of the turnpike from downtown Louisville southward towards Bardstown passed the entrance to Speed's "Farmington" plantation.⁶

At the end of 1831, with the first ten miles of the turnpike completed, the Kentucky General Assembly formed an act to establish the Bardstown and Louisville Turnpike Company to construct the remaining 29 miles through Mt. Washington to Bardstown. This route was to be cleared to at least a 50 foot width and graded to a 20 foot wide roadbed constructed using the "McAdams Plan"⁷ - a style of construction created by the Scottish engineer John Loudon McAdam whereby workers would lay large slabs of limestone with the flat sides down and jagged sides upward and then wedge smaller stones in between. They would then lay crushed stone on the top as the "metal" of the road. This method created a road of great vertical and horizontal strength that would hold up to heavy traffic with minimal wash-out over time.² The 0.56-mile section of turnpike roadbed included in this nomination is the only place known to remain on the original turnpike route where the McAdam limestone roadbed remains exposed and intact.

Construction on the remaining 29 miles to Bardstown began in mid-1832, and in late 1837, President of the company, Levi Tyler, reported to the State Legislature that, aside from some remaining wood on the Salt River bridge, the turnpike was complete and would be open for Christmas traffic.⁷ In the 1840s the route was extended southward from Bardstown to the Tennessee line and in 1850 joined with the turnpike in Tennessee to become the eastern route of the Louisville-Nashville Turnpike.²

Along the turnpike, mile markers made of limestone and etched with carvings were stationed at every mile to inform travelers of their distance from the turnpike termini of Louisville and Bardstown. The "L#" above a "B#" carved in each stone indicated the number of miles to Louisville ("L#") and to Bardstown ("B#"). As stated on Kentucky Historical Marker signs (#1021 and #1022) standing next to two of these stones, in 1967 there were 14 milestones still standing. Fifty years later, only nine of these original turnpike milestones remain in place along the 39-mile route.⁵

Adding to this rich history in a local context, Mt. Washington's Mayor Barry Armstrong's great-great-grandfather, James Showalter, drove stagecoaches on this route from Louisville to Bardstown and later, on to Nashville. On his route, he carried countless travelers along the 1830's turnpike including the famous names of Zachary Taylor and Andrew Jackson. According to the Showalter family history, as shared in an interview with Mayor Armstrong, Abraham Lincoln, a close friend of Joshua Speed's, John Speed's son, rode from the Louisville riverfront in Showalter's stagecoach to Speed's "Farmington" plantation where he would spend three weeks visiting his dear friend in the late summer of 1841 following the decision to call off his engagement with Mary Todd. Showalter continued carrying passengers along this route well into his 80's and became known as "the oldest stagecoach driver in America".⁸

With the continued growth, development and new road building of north central Kentucky, the nine milestones and the small section of original roadbed included in this nomination are among the very few historic resources of the period that remain standing in their original historic context along the route of the 1830s Louisville-Bardstown Turnpike, serving as a lasting reminder of the early transportation development of the region.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The nominated property includes nine limestone mile markers standing at individual points along the original 39-mile route of the 1830s Louisville-Bardstown turnpike and one 0.56 mile section of the original turnpike macadam roadbed on the north end of the City of Mt. Washington, KY. Since these objects are located at individual points at least one mile distant from each other, they constitute a discontinuous district.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundary of the nine limestone mile markers is limited only to the area along the roadside that they occupy. No adjoining portions of the roadside significantly relate to the markers themselves. The boundary of the 0.56-mile exposed section of the original turnpike construction is limited only to the length and width of the roadbed. Nothing along or bordering the turnpike roadbed significantly relates to the historical context of the turnpike.

The use of a discontinuous district in this nomination is justified by the widely spread location of the mile markers and the section of original turnpike roadbed which are, nonetheless, related to each other in the historical context of the early turnpike. The ten individual resources included in this nomination as a discontinuous district are located in Jefferson, Bullitt, Spencer and Nelson Counties of Kentucky.
